With this idea in view Merchant built an incline from the top of the farm barn to a height a little less than the comb of the roof of a nearby chicken coop, over which the incline was built to give the bicycle the necessary unward tendency. Thirty feet away the received incline was built, between the two inclines a large watering trough being located. Apostle John Henry Smith was the principal speaker of the day and yesterday electronon marked his first public appearance in the Tabernacle since recovering from his long and critical illness. After priefly discussing the inspiration which comes from song and music asid contrasting the beavenly spirit which accombanies it as compared with that incident to cursing and swearing, he branched off on a discussion of the carily history of the church. That spirit of love which accombanies it as compared with that incident in the sospel revealed by Joseph Smith. It was his great love of truth and of humanity that impelled him on to the work which he accomplished, and not his distire for vain honor and glory."

President Seymour R. Young also addressed the congregation. He opened by congratulating the Saints on their bright prospects and remarked that the officers of Pioner stake had been especially solves and diligent in attending to their church duties. He referred considerably to cally church history and paid glowing tributes to the memory of Joseph Smith at Brigham Young. He argued that the success which attended Brigham Young's labous as a ploneer and country builder proved beyond all question of a doubt that he was the right and only man to succeed Joseph Smith.

The mirrning services were slimly attended and J. Golden Kimball noted it as a fact that reflected discredit upon the zeal of the Saints. He also took occasion to remark that there was a growing disposition all over the Christian world to neglect Sabbath worship.

Blehop L. M. Cannon of Cannon Ward and Blahop L. G. Hogan of the Twenty-eixh ward reported that their districts were in a most flourishing condition. L. M.
